Negotiations for the purchase of the bark Min are under way but will not be complete until to-morrow. It has been heard however that the Min will be employed in the Island trade, that is she will run sometimes between San Francisco and this port, occasionally running to China and probably to Puget Sound thence to the Colonies and back to Honolulu. The Min is a fast sailer and was by the well-known ship builders built Robt. Steele & Co., celebrated for having constructed some of the fastest ships known.

Since writing the above it has been ascertained that the Inter-Island Steam Navigation Co. have purchased the vessel.

A RULING.

During the trial of an adultery case in the Police Court this morning, the female defendant was called to the witness stand by the Attorney for the defense.

Judge Dayton said that by her going on the stand she was compelled to answer all questions put to her, concerning the case in question.

Mr. Kaulukou, Counsel for the defense, objected, saying that the defendant was not compelled to answer any questions that would criminate herself.

The Judge remained firm to the ruling that the defendant took the stand at her own risk, and having given Mr. Kaulukou to understand that the defendant, if placed in the witness-box, would have to answer all questions pertaining to the case, she was called from the box.

SILK WORMS.

A Japanese at No. 100 Nuuanu avenue, has a quantity of silk worms, eggs and cocoons for sale. The worms were raised here from eggs brought from Japan. A lot of Cocoons attached to an evergreen shrub were brought to this office yesterday, as also some of the worms, and eggs. The worms presented a very healthy appearance and were quite active, while the Cocoons were really beautiful some being pure white, while others were a rich yellow. An opportunity is now offered for persons so desiring, to engage in silk raising either for pleasure or profit, at a small expense, as this Japanese is prepared to furnish eggs, or worms in quantities to suit.

VACCINATION.

Forty-five millions of people died from smallpox in the century preceding vaccination, without taking into account those who recovered and were disfigured for life or afflicted with blindness as its direct result. Two millions perished in the Russian Empire in a single year. According to Dr. Lettison, 210,000 fell annual victims to it on the Continent of Europe. The yearly mortality in England was over forty five thousand; cities were decimated, villages deserted and armies disbanded by its means.

This is what smallpox has done in the past. No doubt its malignancy was aggravated and its mortality increased by improper modes of treatment and also by ignorance of hygienic laws. But, nevertheless, whenever smallpox has had opportunity, even at the present day, to manifest itself unchecked, it has shown nearly the same venom and deadliness which have always characterized it.

HOW THE DISEASE SPREADS.

The modes by which the contagion is spread are various. The best-known one is, of course, that of personal contact with an individual suffering from smallpox. Persons not themselves liable to the disease may communicate it to others by carrying the contagion in their clothing. The air in the neighborhood becomes infected by it, and sometimes communicates it for an almost incredible distance. Houses become infected with the germs of the disease, and can only become disinfected by burning the bedding, repapering the walls and subjecting the entire house to a process of thorough cleaning. Persons in the incipient stage of smallpox, and sometimes even in the convalescent stage, make their appearance in public, and the disease is thus communicated to many. Not infrequently smallpox occurs in a family, the members of which, not wishing to become objects of terror to the community, suppress the fact, while they themselves come and go the same as usual, carrying infection with them; and suddenly that neighborhood is visited by a serious smallpox epidemic.

THE VACCINATION THEORY.

The theory in regard to vaccination is that the disease in a mild form takes hold of the system, and either completely or partially destroys the liability to contract the same disease in the future. If the destruction is only partial, it can be made total by future vaccinations. All authorities agree that it is necessary to revaccinate frequently—just as often, in fact, as the system shows itself in readiness to take the vaccinations.

Then as often as once in five or seven years vaccination should be repeated in order to obtain complete immunity from smallpox.

The statistics of every smallpox epidemic show that the mortality of the disease is in inverse ratio to the number of times which the individual attacked has been vaccinated. We are told that the danger from smallpox is greatest to children, while in the case of vaccination the danger from smallpox increases with years. This is only true when the effect of vaccination wears away and the person is not revaccinated. It has, therefore, been demonstrated by the experience of many years that vaccination is necessary, and that if one would secure perfect immunity from smallpox he must be vaccinated as often as once in five or seven years.

DECREASE OF MORTALITY.

Vaccination was recognized by law in England, in 1840, and became compulsory in 1853. The mortality statistics from 1838 to 1876 show a steady decrease of deaths from smallpox, from 571 to every 1,000,000, to 97 to the same number.

The following table, extracted from the work of Dr. E. C. Seaton, Medical Inspector of the Privy Council of England, shows the average number of yearly deaths from smallpox in London for periods of ten years, from 1751 to 1861:

From 1751 to 1760	2,061
From 1761 to 1770	2,445
From 1771 to 1780	2,204
From 1781 to 1790	1,705
From 1791 to 1800	1,780
From 1801 to 1810	1,158
From 1811 to 1820	793
From 1821 to 1830	699
From 1831 to 1840	573
From 1841 to 1850	841
From 1851 to 1860	715

This remarkable diminution can be attributed to no other cause than first, the adoption of inoculation, and more recently of vaccination.—[S. F. Bulletin.]
